Reflection

I really enjoyed this series of projects. The continuation made this really fun for me, being able to see the website progression from a very bare-bones HTML document that was barely readable to now an—admittedly not perfect but still so much better it kind of blows my mind to see—awesome website that can actually serve a purpose for me. I've been using this already since the beginning as my new replacement character sheet, but now there is some great functionality involved and a very readable and useable character sheet. Overall, I'm really happy with how it has been progressing and I have a lot of ideas to further rework it in the future.

I think I may completely rewrite it again. It's sort of long as is but I have a much more solid grasp of all the components involved now that I think I could build it much better and faster, and not only would it be great practice, but it would also be fantastic for readability of the code since, let's be honest, my CSS could use a lot of work.

I think this is my favourite assignment from first year. Seeing the evolution as I have progressed as a web developer has been extremely satisfying, and I just wanted to thank you for the opportunity to do this as a project.
